About The Company: "Cyberlab Studios was created at the beginning of 2009 and currently, it has nine employees who have experience in the video games and the movie industry. The company is based in Rome, Italy, and currently they work on a range of projects." The company is supported by FanDuel.com who has advertised across their website on the campaign and is integrated with promotional hardware. About the Game developer: "Cyberlab Studios has a team of young people with a love for video games, who at the moment live in Rome. They have seen the growth of other game studios and realised that a team of 10 can turn into a team of 10,000 with a few months. They set out to create their own studio in which to invest and exploit a passion that they had for over a year. Cyberlab Studios' core values are simple: fun, quality, passion, and innovation. Being dedicated to video games, they want to create games that are accessible, and have been made with a sense of fun. Instead of choosing the genres that they are familiar with, they have been trying to show their openness and creativity in order to create games that have a strong sense of fun, that are different and original. There are no restrictions in the creation of their games, and they have been interested in the fashion in which games are made and developed. The development of the game will focus on the challenge of creating a unique piece of software that has been conceived as a whole, with quality and fun in mind, and which will have many updates and solutions to satisfy the player." About the Game developer: "Our main role is to protect the intellectual property on the game, the in-game economy and the game universe. We will have a distributed network of servers that we can adapt to every development phase. The character creation system will be the first one to be developed by the company, and it has already been tested with some prototypes and is currently being implemented. Everything is created by the team.

What's new:

Hidden Objects - Cartoon Fantasy is an 1990 hidden object game developed and distributed by Konami Computer Entertainment Japan for the Nintendo Entertainment System. Unlike most other HOS games, it is playable from both sides of the console, that is on the Game Boy screen and the system itself. Plot The game is set in the magical world of Translucentia, inhabited by its three planes, Translucent, Fragmented, and Transparent. Translucent objects are solid and appear visible to anyone, but also generate translucent beams around them. When any of those beams touch the floor, they will crack and fragment, revealing a treasure (a Golden Star). Translucentia has a population of about one hundred million creatures, most of which are benign (although some are malign or psychically "unbalanced"). The game is told in an iconoclastic and often rebellious fashion, as the primary protagonist is the pet-like animated creature Karbo, who claims to be a god of Translucentia. Being bored with life, he has chosen to amuse and drive away the people of Translucentia by performing cosmic pranks, forcing them to play hidden object games in the meantime. The plot begins when Karbo uses this scheme to play the game that he created, at which point the resident creature "psychic" Helix enters it, along with his humanoid servant, Orion. Both of them claim to be from the Master Ampersand, and split up to make life miserable for the aliens; while Helix takes on the amorous interests of town girls, Orion moves to discover the "secret" of Translucentia. Unknown to Karbo, however, Helix has arranged for Karbo to suffer a fate similar to that of the Blue Stone, but with disastrous consequences - Karbo dies of grief, sending his soul to the realm of Translucentia's fragmenting stone. Karbo's body is given to Kraken, a humorless race of tricksters who play ingeniously hidden object games for sport, and who occupy a volcanic island in the center of Translucentia. Karbo's spirit inhabits three small gem-like jewels belonging to Kraken and must help them recover their missing treasures and reconcile their shared debt to him before they destroy Translucentia. The game is advanced by choosing one out of three available endings. Gameplay Most of the game is played on the Game Boy screen, or on the system itself. In order to play from both ends, one simply switches from screen to screen (or the

Each level is a unique puzzle that you must solve to complete the level and unlock the next section of the mosaic. The main mechanic of the game is infinite jumps - you can jump and then jump again and again to move almost anywhere on the grid. Your goal is to move from the center of the mosaics, over a grid of 3x3 tiles, to the end of the mosaic. While you can jump almost anywhere on the puzzle, tiles are color coded. Certain tiles have a red border, making them impassable; moving onto them or missing them completely results in a game over. The only other color coded tiles are the green bonus tiles, which you can jump onto to start you on a bonus loop around the mosaic. To be able to complete a level, you must complete the course you are on without hitting a red tile; the loop you have been placed on will be unlocked as the blue tiles appear, allowing you to jump to them. About the author: Randall Farquhar is the lead programmer and designer for Mosaic Maze. He is a designer and programmer at Siena Ink and has a PhD in Artificial Intelligence from Georgia Tech. Randall also creates music, game design and art. lessMILWAUKEE -- Matt Holliday was stuck at the Metrodome, waiting for the morning's weather to clear and the snow to melt. The New York Yankees outfielder was acclimating himself to the cold of living in Wisconsin. "You get used to it," Holliday said after his first day of work in a Braves clubhouse before a 7-6, 12-inning win over Milwaukee Wednesday. "We have a blast over here. It's great. "I think the fans love it. I think the players do, too. The weather is beautiful. The food's great. We'll get through it." The three-time All-Star with the Cardinals is in the Braves' outfield until the trade deadline on July 31. Holliday was the centerpiece of the deal that sent Jason Heyward and Shelby Miller to St. Louis. Holliday is coming off consecutive years in which he hit at least.300 and won a Gold Glove Award at third base. He's off to an impressive start at the plate with six homers in 54 at-bats and a.372 batting average to go along with a.526 slugging percentage. "He's having a great year," Braves manager Brian Snitker said.
