Q: Python Function name not saved? I have the following function (I can't change it) def log_choice(choice): if choice == 'yes': print "Will you pay me later?" print "yes" elif choice == 'no': print "That's fine" If I write log_choice('yes') it works but if I write it with more than one character like log_choice('yes /n') it doesn't work and says: NameError: name 'log_choice' is not defined I thought the function name was saved but I never use more than one letter in it to call it, why? A: I've seen some versions of Python prompt the user for one letter, which is then saved as the function name, but no version I've seen will save the rest of the input. However, you could use a traditional if statement. if choice in ('yes', 'no'): print "Will you pay me later?" print "yes" else: print "That's fine" or if you really do want to use log_choice: log_choice(choice) You will also need to set your choice to a global variable, e.g., def log_choice(choice): global choice # rest of your code Q: Nodejs - Expressjs error on controller async function app.post('/api/login', function(req, res) { console.log('posting login to api/login'); var login = { email: req.body.email, password: req.body.password }; process.nextTick(function() { if (passport.authenticate(login, function(err, user) { if (err) { return res.json({ status: 400, message: 'Invalid Cred

Numerical simulation of mass transfer in the skin: development of a mechanistic model. This work aims at providing a mechanistic model, able to predict the rate of mass transfer in the human skin. The first step towards this goal is the development of a mathematical description of the mass transfer process in the viable epidermis. The whole process was numerically simulated with the aim of determining a suitable model. A numerical approach was adopted to implement the viability of the stratum corneum-desmosomes-epidermis structure. To achieve this goal, the continuity conditions of the transport equations and the interface conditions (viable-dead) were assessed. A micro-porous model for the viable epidermis was adopted, taking into account the existence of a tortuosity factor. Finally, a two-fold model was adopted to describe the viability of the stratum corneum-desmosomes-epidermis structure. The model developed here allows the prediction of mass transfer in the viable epidermis due to a permeation process in the presence of several different permeation mechanisms. The obtained results have been compared with experimental data and good agreement has been observed. Proteomic analysis of dendritic cells from patients with systemic sclerosis reveals new potential biomarkers. Systemic sclerosis (SSc) is an autoimmune disorder characterised by hyperproduction of extracellular matrix (ECM) proteins and the presence of vascular abnormalities. Dendritic cells (DCs) play a key role in autoimmune disorders such as SSc by activating T cells, and changes in the expression levels of certain proteins in these cells may be associated with the pathogenesis of SSc. However, there has been no report on the evaluation of serum protein biomarkers in SSc. Serum samples were obtained from 10 SSc patients and 10 age-matched controls. The expression levels of certain proteins in DCs from SSc patients and controls were analysed using 2-DE and matrix-assisted laser desorption/ionisation time-of-flight/time-of-flight (MALDI-TOF/TOF) mass spectrometry. A total of 19 proteins were overexpressed and 10 proteins were underexpressed in DCs from SSc patients compared with controls. Among the overexpressed proteins, 14 proteins were identified. Six of them, including fibronectin,  $\alpha$ 2-macroglobulin and apolipoprotein A-I, are associated with immune regulation. The underexpressed
