Whether you are a beginner or advanced user, we are here to help. We are going to go ahead and discuss both types of Photoshop CC and their features to make it easier to choose. We are going to go ahead and cover Lightroom because it is often confused with Photoshop, but is a different program. The best way to choose between Photoshop and Lightroom is to use the functionality more instead of the name. If the program is more like a digital darkroom workflow—if it makes your job easier and produce better images—then Photoshop fits you perfectly. The features that Photoshop can do is overwhelming, so it can be very hard to choose the right one for you. If you want a program to simply organize your photos, you certainly can do that with Lightroom. However, Lightroom is not a substitute for Photoshop and you should use it as a complement to Photoshop for your workflow. The Marquee tool is pretty much self-explanatory, right? You drag around the target section and when you finish you can delete it or apply it to a different area. The Selection tool is useful for making selections that you can then apply actions to (like painting over the selections) or in the case below you can use the selection to isolate a few pixels and change the color to pink. The magic wand is used mostly for selecting items in an image, particularly the hard edges of photos. It does a fairly good job, but is not perfect. e3d0a04c9c
